Field Day Report - 16th/17th November - Cervantes

As A.F.D.O. my apologies for the sign-on in some of the worst dust I have seen. Fifty members attended and windwise Cervantes really turned it on.

The Cateby was once again the social clime for many members on the trip up, the highlight being the pool table and two of the fairer sex who certainly performed better than one of our members anticipated they would.

Congratulations to Len Singleton and party who led convey to Black Rocks but finished at Hill River. Incidently Len has a new design of radio aerial which I am assured all members can have if they continue to follow him.

Will all members who intend going to Wedge on the next Field Day be sure they have a suitable flag for their vehicles. I was very surprised to see a lot of our members, both four wheel and conventional on the track without a flag!

Several of our younger members were missing from the trip, and the best wishes of the Club to Grant Singleton, Mark Tucker, Don Taylor and Geoff Renshaw, in their forthcoming examinations.

Lofty once again found use for his towing chain. Pulled Alan Roberts and Garry to petrol tank at Cataby.

Eventual Field Day winners were :- Colin Buchanan 13 Kg (Tailor and Shark); Ric Rowland 5.3 Kg (Tailor and Herring); John Lee 2.3 Kg (Tailor and Flathead) and T. Richardson 2.2 Kg (Tailor, Flathead and Herring).

Often wonder about my sanity when I leave comfortable bed etc. to spend weekend in wind and sand and could hardly believe my ears when at approximately midnight on Saturday I heard Club President talking with fish and the fish was heard to say, "For animals of reputed intelligence you humans do some silly things, and the fact that you do catch large numbers of my relations (.1 of a Kilo) only suggests that they are even sillier than you."

November Dry Cast Report

Sunday 3rd November looked like being a very dismal day, with very clouded skies and a slight wind. As the morning progressed on, the weather looked like being alright. The weather being good like it was, Graham Baskerville should have recorded more than 146 M. There seems to be a rumour going around that Graham has cut 10" off his stick (drycasting rod), but others seem to think that a misguided lawnmower may have done the trick instead and this seems to be the reason for Graham's better casting. Anyway, Graham has pledged 150 M + next month!!!

L.L. Distance

This event was won by Graham Baskerville with 42, running a close second was Hew Hoy Yew with 40 and third was D.C.O. with 38. Penalties plagued a lot of the casters with 9 out of 28 not being penalised.

D.H. Accuracy

This turned out to be two very long casts for those casting and a clear leader in this event was Ron Kildahl on 57, second Dennis Green on 53 and third was Stan Renshaw with 52. Good to see Stan in the high scores for a change.

S.H. Accuracy

This turned out to be quite a closely fought battle with Brian Leicester on 27, second Graham Baskerville 24 and third Bill Utting 23. Maybe if the targets were closer the scores would be tighter?

S.H. Open

It was a bit disappointing the number of casters who stayed behind for this event, but we ended up with 10 casters eager to have a go. Winner of this event was George Holman 83 M, second was Hew Hoy Yew 79 M and third was Dave Latto 78 M.

Last, but not forgotten, the markers. Thanks again:

See you at Drycasting in December.

Eric and Roy

Whale Beachings

The following report by Tom Hamrick in the National Fisherman indicates that the age old belief of whales suiciding on the beach is a fallacy and that the deaths are brought about by a minute parasite.

"Do whales commit suicide - often by the dozens at a time - by intentionally beaching themselves.

For centuries, many fishermen have insisted suicide was the only apparent conclusion, when entire "herds" played follow-the-leader onto hard, deadly beaches across the world.

But a team of Smithsonian Institution marine scientists in Washington, D.C., has now reported for the record that the whale wants to live just as badly as any other mammal, human or otherwise.

An enemy too small to be seen by the naked eye has been killing him over the years. In pluging ashore to death, the whale has become a victim of misdirection - caused by a tiny parasite which turns into a giant killer.

After setting up fatal housekeeping in the ears of whales and other ocean mammals, the pinpoint-sized round worm has the abilities to jam an otherwise trustworthy sonar system. The bounce-back echo location apparatus, which permits bats as well as ocean mammals to "see" in thedark, quiddy becomes inoperative, once the parasites infest the ear canals.

The mystery was finally unravelled here, on this tide-washed island just a few miles south of Charleston, when a hurriedly-organized expendition from the Smithsonian rushed down to perform immediate seaside autopsies on many of 35 pilot whales which had propelled themselves high onto the beach.

The incident was only one of hundreds of similar sightings over the years along the Atlantic seaboard. In the past, by the time marine scientists were advised of strandings, the bodies of the mammals had become gigantic, stinking messes which made examination a stomach-retching experience and rendered a conclusive finding all but impossible.

Hardly taking time to separate night from day, the scientists aided by the state-employed marine experts - spent six days at seaside before their open-air explorations were finished. The parasite, the Smithsonian and South Carolina mammal specialists concluded, was finally nailed as the killer cause.

"With their sonar system blocked by the parasites, the whales simply blundered up on the beach and were stranded by the tide," the chief of the eight-man Smithsonian team stated.

Starvation Loomed

And the whale which beached here were also in the process of starving to death, according to Dr James G. Mead, curator of marine mammals for the Smithsonian. Those which died here hadn't eaten a good meal in days.

"The presence of the parasites also explains the empty stomachs," Mead said in a report published by the S.C. Wildlife and Marine Resources Department.

"These whales were unable to locate food and would no doubt have starved if they hadn't beached first."

The worms which were discovered, it must be pointed out, were the same parasites which had been found in the ear canal s of white-sided delphins which had undergone autopsies a few months earlier after a school became stranded at Cape Cod. Charlie Potter, an aide to Mead, headed the team of examiners at Cape Cod.

It was Potter's discovery which is credited here with leading to a solution of the mystery of the "suicidal whale". In checking to determine if the two death scenes had anything in common, the Smithsonians promptly found similar infestations in the whales' ears.

"Whales have relatively good eyesight but they depend much more on echo-location to help them navigate, particularly in murky waters or at great depths where there is little light," the published Mead report contended.

Much of the final stages of the autopsy operation was performed under the microscopes at the Smithsonian. Some of the whales were decapitated and the heads transferred to Washington for the painstaking examination.

The lives of 11 of the 35 whales, incidently, were saved by staff members of the S.C. Marine Resources and Wildlife Department, who rushed to the beach from the state marine centre at nearby James Island. Working with volunteers, they tugged and shoved 11 of the sea-going monsters back into the boiling surf before death could win the race.

The deceased hulks of the other two dozen oceanic denizens provided the two teams of scientists a saltwater mother lode for examination.

Aids Understanding

"The very nature of their environment (has made) it extremely difficult to study living whales under natural conditions," said Pete Laurie of the marine staff of the state centre at James Island. "Strandings" have therefore become our primary source of information about the physical characteristics of these intriguing animals.

"While mass beachings are not uncommon, many take place in remote parts of the world and go unnoticed by man. Here on Kiawah Island was a unique opportunity to learn a great deal about a rather common but little known animal," Laurie said.

Among those happiest that the mystery is solved is Dr Mead, who made known that "the old idea of whales committing suicide has never been popular with the scientific community."

Sixteen Years Ago This Month

The November field day was held on the weekend of the 15th/16th November with 27 members and 4 juniors making the trip to Garden Island.

Conditions were ideal for fishing but as in present times fish were scarce and quite a few members failed to move the scales.

It's interesting to note that due to new management the boat trip was increased to $/- and after expenses were met, the Club fund was increased by 3/-.

Winners of the various sections were:

Heaviest Ray : Ron Shirley - 19 lbs
Heaviest Scale Fish : Jim Clarke - 8 lb Salmon
Heaviest Bag Scale Fish : Tom Hales - 17 lbs
Best Junior Effort : Brian Hales - 4½ lb Kingie

A total of 114 lbs of fish were caught.

A combined Picnic and Casting Day was held at Floreat, with Ginger Beer and ice cream flowing.

One of the improvers on the day was Bert Payne who nearly cracked the ton, two others to earn good points were Ron Shirley and Les Shand.

Hints to help Club members contemplating a trip to Garden Island to catch fish.

- 1. Don't go :- no fish.
- 2. Don't take the morning boat (too many bods).
- 3. Don't take the afternoon boat (it rolls with a westerly).
- 4. Don't mourn Capt. Cook.
- 5. Don't forget your Reel. (Shades of Shandy Gaff what sacrilege).
- 6. Don't forget to take some fresh tomatoes.
- 7. Don't go North (too far).
- 8. Don't go South (no transport).
